Washington State Department of Labor and Industries

Ron Fuller, Chief Electrical Inspector

Vol. 9 No. 2

February 2006

Three Positions Open On Electrical Board

There are currently three board positions vacant or up for re-appointment in July 2006. The positions include: electrician, general public, and telecommunication provider. Applications must be received, by the Governor, no later than March 15, 2006. The Governor is interested in improving ethnic, gender and geographic balance on the Electrical Board. Applications must be made using the Application for Gubernatorial Appointment to a Board or Commission form. Requests for copies of the application and any questions may be directed to Christina Pourarien at (360) 902-5259 or downloaded at:

http://www.governor.wa.gov/actions/appointments/boards/

Applicants should submit a letter of interest, completed application form, current resume, and letters of recommendation to the Governor's office (Office of the Governor, Attn: Shana Melanson, PO Box 40002, Olympia, WA 98504-0002) by March 15, 2006.

Electrical Contractor Survey

Thanks to everyone who took the time to respond to the recent survey sent to 4,195 electrical contractors across Washington. Twenty-seven percent (1,115) of the contractors surveyed responded. Thanks to everyone who took the time to provide us with their thoughts. We value your input and will use it to make the Electrical Program better able to serve our customers. The survey was intended to help L&I identify electrical contractors' primary needs and concerns.

In general, contractors indicated a strong satisfaction with the overall services currently provided by the Electrical Program. The contractors who responded listed three items that are of most concern.

By far, the most significant need is for L&I to respond to inspection requests as soon as possible, preferably within 24 hours after receiving a request. Contractors indicated that they incur substantial costs when inspections are delayed.

Other issues that stood out in the survey's results were:

- Ensuring consistency, fairness, and professionalism among inspectors; and
- Improving on L&I's efforts in combating fraud (i.e. the underground economy and helping to ensure a level competitive playing field).

The Electrical Program will use all the survey results to help in setting program policy and direction in the future. The program will continue its emphasis on providing 24 hour turnaround for inspection requests. L&I is currently requesting eight additional inspectors to help us respond faster to inspection requests. Efforts will also continue in improving the consistency, fairness, and professionalism of our inspectors and in combating fraud. The Electrical-CORE team is now in place and is seeking out violators of electrical licensing and permitting laws.

Fire Alarm Systems

Some building officials are now allowing the fire detection devices required in residential occupancies to be a part of a centralized alarm system (i.e. security and fire) that has battery backup. When this is allowed, the normally installed 120 volt w/independent battery back-up smoke detectors are usually not installed. If centralized fire detection devices are used as a part of any other system, the circuiting for those detectors must meet the requirements of WAC 296-46B-760 and NEC 760 for power-limited fire alarm circuits.

WAC 296-46B-760 requires all boxes in a fire alarm circuit to be painted red. When a limited energy installation heat or smoke detector circuit is installed in lieu of line voltage smoke detectors, the red paint identifies the fire alarm circuits from other systems. The red paint is only necessary for those boxes installed for the fire or smoke alarm system circuits. Any other limited energy circuit (security, etc.) boxes do not require identification with red paint. NEC 760.26, .55, and .56 place specific requirements on other systems (power, security, etc.) allowed in these dedicated fire or smoke alarm system boxes.

Junction boxes for traditional line voltage smoke detectors (with battery back-up) have no special circuit separation or painting requirements, since the functionality is in the device, not the circuit. Other circuits can be in the junction box that supplies a line voltage smoke detector.

Grounding Requirements for Feeders Between Structures

National Electrical Code (NEC) 250.32(B)(1) and (2) are unclear. Subsection(1) requires that an equipment grounding conductor be run with the feeder supply conductors to a separate building/structure and says that a grounded circuit conductor (neutral) cannot be connected to the equipment grounding system at the separate building/structure. Subsection (2) appears to contradict the requirements in subsection (1) by not requiring an equipment grounding conductor to be installed and by also allowing the neutral to be connected to the equipment grounding system at the separate building/structure.

WAC 296-46B-250(2) takes precedent over the requirements in NEC 250.32(B) (1) and (2) for grounding a separate building/structure. The WAC says, "Effective August 1, 2003, an equipment grounding conductor must be installed with the circuit conductors between buildings and/or structures. A grounded conductor (i.e., neutral) is not permitted to be used in place of a separate equipment grounding conductor between buildings and/or structures."

An equipment grounding conductor must be installed with the circuit conductors between buildings and the neutral cannot be grounded to the equipment grounding system at the additional building/structure. This ensures that no stray neutral conductor current is placed on the equipment grounding system or runs through the earth. The equipment grounding system is not designed to carry any portion of the circuit current.

In addition, NEC 250.32(A) requires a complete grounding electrode system at each building supplied by a feeder. The only exception is where a single branch circuit supplies the building/structure and the branch circuit includes an equipment grounding conductor.

Can One Water Well, Septic, Or Other System Be Used To Supply Two Dwellings?

The NEC does not prohibit the sharing of plumbing or other mechanical systems between dwellings. However, it does have specific requirements for the electrical circuits providing power to those systems. The basic requirements of NEC 210.25 have been in place since the 1980's.

NEC 210.25 says, "Branch circuits in dwelling units shall supply only loads within that dwelling unit or loads associated only with that dwelling unit..." In the case of two or more dwelling units sharing a common well, septic, or other mechanical system, the electrical supply to these systems cannot come from any of the individual dwelling units. The system must be supplied from a separate source of power, not from one of the dwellings.

Electrical Work Permits

A single entity purchasing electrical work permits may include all the electrical work being done on a single job site in one electrical work permit (e.g. temporary service, building service, feeders, swimming pool, septic, etc.).

The rules require that "each entity" responsible for electrical work must obtain a permit for their own work. For example, an 01-General electrical contractor installing a building service/circuits and an 06A-HVAC/R electrical contractor installing HVAC/R low voltage controls must obtain separate permits under their individual business' name(i.e. 01-General permits the service/circuits, the 06A-HVAC/R permits the low voltage controls). If the description of work on an electrical permit is expanded to cover the work of another contractor or individual, the permit purchaser will be held responsible for the work, good or bad.

Electrical Question of the Month

This Month's Question: When equipment has been recognized as suitable for a specific purpose, function, use, environment, application, and so forth, it is which of the following: A) Approved, B) Listed, C) Identified, D) Labeled.

Last Month's Question: The minimum ampacity for circuit conductors supplying a varying duty pump motor with a 30 minute duty rating shall be sized based on what percentage of the motor nameplate current? A) 150%, B) 125%, C) 115%, D) 100%. The answer is: A) [Table 430-22(E) Duty-Cycle Service]
